SHELTON STATE has recently launched a new student activity program, the Shelton State Ambassadors. The Ambassadors are a student public relations group for the college. To become an Ambassador, students must complete a basic leadership development course and be invited to be in a leadership practicum the following quarter.

At present 14 students are in the program at the junior college and a class is beginning at the technical division. Jean O'Connor is director of the Ambassadors.

In order to better promote the college, the Ambassadors need the help of the college personnel. They will interview each department head at the college in order to learn more about the various areas of the college.

Faculty and staff are encouraged to submit names of students they think would be good members of this program. Ambassadors should demonstrate intelligence, creativity and leadership abilities. Names of candidates should be submitted to Nicole Blackburn through the office of the dean of students.

Current members of the Ambassadors are: David Green, president; Kevin Brown, vice president; Nisa Sellers, secretary; Leigh Caddis, treasurer; Donny Jones, parliamentarian; Shannon Skinner; Todd Smith; Chris Stewart; Fran Viselli; Tracy Reed; Karen Ashcraft; Ann Hollingsworth; Nicole Blackburn; Candice Wilson.
